ARTICLES

CLINICAL OBSERVATIONS

Observations on the clinical course of the disease in the case of a patient with a long history of the disease. The patient had been treated with various remedies, but without success. The disease was characterized by a chronic course, with periods of remission and exacerbation. The patient's condition was complicated by various other diseases, which made the diagnosis and treatment difficult. The author describes the patient's history, the physical examination, the laboratory findings, and the treatment given. The results of the treatment are discussed, and the author concludes that the disease is a chronic one, and that the treatment should be directed towards the control of the symptoms.
